Are your days consumed by Crisis Management?

Let's face it, the process is broken. In the past, corporations hired marketing agencies to develop strategy; their in-house creative groups implemented these initiatives and managed roll-out. Corporate downsizing has replaced these cohesive teams with temporary, freelance and part-time staff, resulting in more pressure placed on fewer people to produce increasingly complex marketing initiatives. Campaigns are paralyzed by inefficient, inconsistent, and error-prone workflows, wasted spend, and missed opportunities.
